To his amazement, the former employee had no idea that he had done anything wrong. In 2006, another man traced a former co-worker who had worked for the same company as the torturer. This second man had written a highly critical report that was passed around the company and outed his former co-worker, who was soon fired. In March, a reporter tracked down a former employee of a defense contractor who had done horrific things with incapacitated women. The reporter found the man on the phone with his former mistress. The reporter asked what he had been doing for the past year, and the former employee replied, "I've been living in caves." All three of these examples are believed to be the first in which a reporter has successfully identified a former contractor with no apparent connection to the military. These findings were published in Military Police Legal Resource Manual (MPLRM) Vol. 4, which noted that contractors have committed up to 3,000 acts of torture and war crimes under Bush and Obama. Just when you thought the American Dream was being torn apart at the seams, the real estate tycoons of Silicon Valley are turning to Orwellian "compulsory sales" tactics to evict the oldest people from their homes. "Compulsory sales" is what a couple of tech billionaires' in Palo Alto have been calling the tactics their working-class neighbors have been using to avoid being "swooped" by billionaire hedge fund investors. The evictions have pushed the town of Palo Alto — which has more than 30,000 residents and the highest per capita income in the nation — into one of the nation's more difficult economic and social battles. Billionaires and their hedge fund investors are holding onto their big homes while seizing the homes of their neighbors at a rapid rate. Palo Alto homeowners, who were supported in their fight against the effort to evict them by the National Association of Realtors, are now left with fewer and fewer affordable housing options while their hedge fund owners are salivating to gobble up their increasingly rare non-inflated property. With the help of the NAR, the real estate industry has built a campaign against "greedy" realtors — the "handyman" character they are creating to represent them — that has so far convinced several California cities to pass laws banning them from working on homeowners' homes. "The property owners in Silicon Valley are being screwed over," said political analyst and journalist Debra Nussbaum of the left-leaning Economic Policy Institute
